My dear sir,

I am in today's mail under two covers sending you my second letter. I am also writing what I call side lines, thoughts and incidents, which came into my mind as I was writing the other, which you may have if you wish when they are finished. I understood Barber to say your work was not for publication, but for the purpose of having a history of the facts, for yourself and a few friends. If this is the case, I wish you would preserve my letters, so I can have them when you are through with them, as I have promised for years to give my son who is of a literary bent, some stuff to make a story of. With the compliments of the season I am

Very truly yours,

W. C. Irvine
